

INTERSECTING ROUTES TO A BETTER WAY OF LIFE
Methodological, theoretical and thematic issues in lifestyle and amenity migration research

Research Centre of the Slovenian Academy of Sciences and Arts
(ZRC SAZU), Ljubljana, Slovenia, October 13-14th 2016

Organisation committee: Nataša Rogelja (ZRC SAZU Slovenian Migration Institute), Michaela Benson (Goldsmith University), Mari Korpela (University of Tampere), Martina Bofulin (ZRC SAZU Slovenian Migration Institute), Mojca Vah Jevšnik (ZRC SAZU Slovenian Migration Institute)

This workshop brings together researchers, ideas and conceptualisations developed in the fields of lifestyle migration research, amenity migration and counterurbanisation, to consider the values that these distinct approaches to understanding similar social phenomena can offer to one another. In this way, the workshop encourages dialogue that brings together foci on individual migrant subjectivities, experiences and trajectories; consideration of spatial processes and how these are caught up in the construction and attraction of particular places as offering a better way of life; alongside the consequences of such migration trends for people and places. Where amenity migration has placed more emphasis on the spatial aspects with often explicit objectives of planning and managing amenity while lifestyle migration approaches have centred more on social aspects, on the relationship between structural and individual factors, on the cultural imaginaries behind migration and related geographies of meanings. Intersecting routes to a better way of life wishes to address the distinctiveness of different approaches (lifestyle migration, amenity migration and other approaches that address similar practices) through the concrete case studies or theoretical reflections as well as find spaces of overlap and scholarly collaborations across research strands.
